“Receiving payments as a US company was nearly impossible without BitPay.”

-- Nathan Hasley
CEO of Bellatorra Skin Care LLC

The Opportunity:

Bellatorra Skin Care CEO Nathan Halsey knew they wanted to reach the fast-growing Chinese cosmetics market but there were major road-blocks limiting them from doing so. Some small and medium-sized businesses are starting to find that out, particularly in their efforts to reach international markets like China.

Wire transfers in and out of developing countries are costly, with multiple intermediary banks taking their own cuts of the payments. These transfer costs are painful for the world's largest businesses, but they make accessing international markets particularly hard for businesses that haven't yet cracked the Fortune 500.

These countries typically have very restrictive international banking access, or none at all.

The Solution:

Bitcoin sidesteps many of the problems Bellatorra and other multinational businesses find when doing business in emerging markets. Designed for peer-to-peer transactions on a global internet bitcoin makes it possible to send money around the world as fast as sending an email.

While bitcoin is a new technology to many businesses, the BitPay platform makes it practical to start accepting bitcoin payments from your clients or resellers.

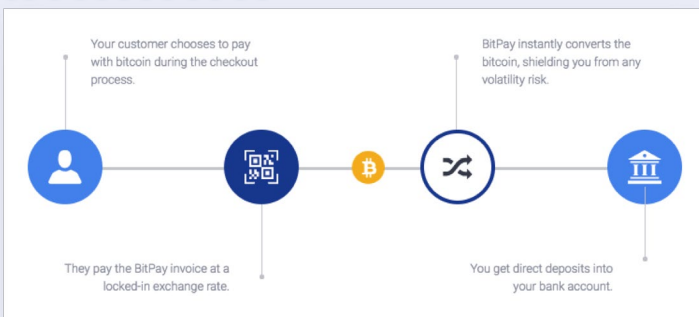

With BitPay, Bellatorra Skin Care was able to simplify cross-border payments without any technical knowledge or integration work.

BitPay receives bitcoin payments on behalf of businesses and converts them into the local fiat currencies. BitPay deposits every dollar, euro, or yuan charged (minus a flat 1% processing fee) to the business's bank account usually within one business day, with no risk of bitcoin price volatility or chargeback fraud.

The Results:

For Bellatorra and the international supplier, the payment process was simple. Bellatorra created a BitPay account and sent a six-figure invoice to the supplier through email. The supplier sent a bitcoin payment using their bitcoin wallet.

The payment processed in minutes and settled to Bellatorra's bank account in the form of US dollars in fewer than two business days.
